wifi and go to that website and download the firmware for your device. and the site doesnt have an official ROM so i'm gonna get it through that link may not work on all devices also, what are the chances that this will be a dead end I would be surprised, but we don't know anything about what is being done The only way to know for sure is to try that's cool, I'll try it 100% sure the best it will do is brick the device Hundred: if you do it, please come back and report the outcome, if you succeed. !phone | Hundred Hundred: Information about the Ubuntu Touch platform for Phone and Tablet is available here Support and discussion in #ubuntu-touch i'm reading that page, but what are my chances of getting it to work without spending $300 Hundred: i would expect none to have a functional installation. Hundred: read the web site you came from for that information okay, i think i'll try it, thanks for the help Hundred: good luck, keep us posted. hundred it's easy to come back and report on progress. Hundred: just remember, if you have a rooted Android phone, it may not apply good point Hundred: if it is not working after you flash the firmware, that means the flash process has failed, the device is bricked can i install ubuntu in one partition of a USB drive? and if i do, will I be able to move the files into my android root? Hundred: yes, you can use a VM to try it, and yes, if the installation is successful it will be possible to move your data from the installed ubuntu system.

Hundred: the latter is less clean, and not the preferred way to install. but if you
