Defendant has never been in the business of making model names or marks. However, the record is replete with testimony showing that the company's actions are calculated to deceive and confuse the public to believe that its products are in fact a trademark of the plaintiff. In the instant case the only basis for a finding of bad faith is the similarity of defendants' trade name "Corporation for Public Justice" and plaintiff's mark "COPC." There is no evidence of record to indicate that defendants have used the mark "COPC" in a bad faith manner. Indeed, plaintiff has proceeded in this litigation for the past four years without having its own mark registered. In the instant case the court has found that plaintiff has a strong, if not superior, mark. The defendants have made no attempt to register the mark "Corporation for Public Justice." It is the defendants' actions which have led to the use of the mark "COPC." The bad faith issue therefore presents *817 the unusual problem of determining the intent of the defendants in using a mark which might be a "spurious equivalent" of plaintiff's registered mark.[2] In sum, the court finds that defendants' mark "COPC" is not a "spurious equivalent" of plaintiff's mark "COPC." Further, the court finds that there is no evidence of record which would indicate that defendants have used their mark in bad faith. IT IS ORDERED that defendants' motion to dismiss be denied. IT IS ORDERED that plaintiff's motion for an injunction be granted as to the mark "COPC" only. NOTES [1] 15 U.S.C. § 1127 provides in part: The owner of a registered mark... is entitled, subject to the provisions of sections 1111 and 1113 of this title,... to the registration of his trademark for the purposes of this chapter... except
