Morphine self-administration by rats produces tolerance and physical dependence. While exploring the underlying mechanisms of tolerance to morphine, we found that the gamma-amino butyric acid (GABA) B agonist, baclofen, not only increased the rate at which a morphine-infused rat self-administered morphine, it also enhanced the expression of morphine withdrawal signs. Intracerebroventricular baclofen (50 and 100 ng) given during a drug-free period from the 12th to the 14th day of morphine-infusion increased the intensity of flinching during the 8th hour after naloxone-induced withdrawal (100, 200 mg/kg IP). These results show that the enhancement of the expression of morphine withdrawal by baclofen is associated with an increase in the activity of the locus coeruleus.Respiratory syncytial virus (RSV) is the most important cause of bronchiolitis and pneumonia in young infants. After initial serological surveys of infants, attempts have been made to design a safe and effective vaccine but to date no effective vaccine is 570a42141b
